Please note that the cash distribution shown on your Tax Statement will not equal the total of the cash distributions you have received for the year as shown on your periodic statements. This is because the information in your tax statement is calculated on a present entitlement basis. That is taxable income distributed forms part of the assessable income of investors in the year of entitlement rather than the year of receipt of cash. Cash may be received in the current year to which investors may have been entitled and taxable in the previous year. Similarly an amount to which investors are entitled and taxable in the current year may not be received until the following tax year.

This tax statement has been prepared without taking into account your objectives, financial situation or needs. This tax statement does not constitute personal tax advice. Therefore, before preparing an income tax return, you should consider the appropriateness and relevance of the tax statement, taking into account your specific circumstances. This statement has been prepared on the basis that you are an Australian resident for tax purposes. Where this is not the case, or where assumptions used do not apply to you, particular amounts may need to be recalculated. The tax statement has been prepared based on tax laws current as at June 2022. If you have any doubt about the taxation position of your investment, or require any further information about your personal tax position, we strongly recommend you talk to your accountant or tax adviser. This information has been prepared in good faith and with all reasonable care.
