Helpful hint to manage your loan

Why might we perform an interest adjustment

Sometimes we need to backdate a deposit or withdrawal transaction on your loan and/or offset account. This can happen for a number of reasons, including when you've completed a transaction on a weekend or public holiday. When we backdate a transaction, we'll re-calculate the offset amount on your linked ANZ loan and process additional debit or credit interest adjustments to your account. You might see these adjustments on the ANZ App, in Internet Banking or on your statement.

Consolidate your debts

Many Australians have multiple debts such as credit cards or personal loans to juggle. If so, you may be paying more interest than you need to. Speak to us about the possibility of consolidating your debts into your home loan.

Helpful hint to manage your loan

Why might we perform an interest adjustment

Sometimes we need to backdate a deposit or withdrawal transaction on your loan and/or offset account. This can happen for a number of reasons, including when you've completed a transaction on a weekend or public holiday. When we backdate a transaction, we'll re-calculate the offset amount on your linked ANZ loan and process additional debit or credit interest adjustments to your account. You might see these adjustments on the ANZ App, in Internet Banking or on your statement.

Pay extra from the start

If you have a variable rate loan, and you add extra money to each loan payment or deposit large amounts (like your tax return, dividend payments and any bonuses), you can shorten the life of the loan considerably, as well as save on interest. You may not notice the difference in your daily spending, but you will notice the difference in your loan balance.

For fixed rate loans, remember that making extra payments during a fixed rate period could trigger an Early Repayment Cost. This cost can be very large. You should consider the tolerance amounts for early or additional repayments on your loan before making any changes during a fixed rate period. ANZ can provide an estimate of the Early Repayment Cost if you are considering making changes to your repayment arrangements during a fixed rate period.

Helpful hint to manage your loan

Why might we perform an interest adjustment

Sometimes we need to backdate a deposit or withdrawal transaction on your loan and/or offset account. This can happen for a number of reasons, including when you've completed a transaction on a weekend or public holiday. When we backdate a transaction, we'll re-calculate the offset amount on your linked ANZ loan and process additional debit or credit interest adjustments to your account. You might see these adjustments on the ANZ App, in Internet Banking or on your statement.

Move to fortnightly repayments

By moving to fortnightly repayments set at half the monthly repayment amount, you could reduce your home loan principal faster and reduce the total interest payable.

*Paying half the monthly repayment amount of your loan each fortnight is a way to make an additional repayment each year.
